Globalization Remains a Priority in Tough Times

Colleges and universities are more aware than ever of the global marketplace students face upon graduation, and in response they have mounted many and varied internationalization initiatives. The American Council on Education (ACE) has released Mapping Internationalization on U.S. Campuses, a report assessing survey data from 2001, 2006, and 2011 based on six criteria: strategic plans and mission statements, administrative structure and staffing, curriculum and learning outcomes, faculty policies, study abroad programs and international student support, and international collaboration and partnerships.

This report is the only comprehensive source of data on internationalization in U.S. higher education institutions from all sectors and includes two- and four-year, public and private, degree-granting institutions. One of the most encouraging findings was that among “institutions reporting an accelerated focus on internationalization since 2008, funding for these efforts has either increased (47 percent) or held steady (27 percent).” [ACE’s adviser for global initiatives] said the statistics are ‘pretty phenomenal’ in light of the budget constraints plaguing so many higher education institutions in recent years.” Read more about the findings in Inside Higher Ed or download the full report.

Sedona Update

School stewards are finishing inputting 2011-2012 Scholarly Activity into Sedona for faculty. This will bring faculty activity up to date as of May 2, 2012 Snapshots.

We look forward to providing access to faculty members by the end of summer so that all may begin to appreciate the array of benefits offered in the SedonaWeb program!

Keep an eye out for upcoming training and Q&A sessions to be offered beginning in August 2012.

Grants Office Social Media

Remember when you actually thumbed through pages of the Federal Register or journal publications to find out about grant opportunities? Or learned about faculty scholarship simply through internal reports? We remember too! That’s why the Stockton Grants Office is taking the plunge into social media this summer and bringing content to your fingertips when and where you want it!

Now, you will find the following features on the Grants Office Facebook and Twitter pages:

- Current internal and external funding opportunities as they are made public;
- Stockton Faculty Scholarly Activity Spotlights—via video and photos;
- The latest and greatest articles related to scholarship and grantsmanship;
- Trends and tips on the funding climate, proposal writing, managing research;
- Educational information on responsible conduct of research and other compliance topics; and
- Much, much more!
