Stockton University is proud to present its annual Scholarly Activity Booklet, in recognition and celebration of the exceptional work completed by our students, faculty, and staff over the past year.

The information contained within these pages truly represents the depth and breadth of activity undertaken by our community of learners. This booklet truly symbolizes the best of our institution: outstanding scholarly research, meaningful academic exploration, and exciting creative expression. Collectively, these efforts play a vital role in supporting the University’s strategic themes of Learning, Engagement, Global Perspectives, and Sustainability.

The quality and reputation of Stockton as a distinguished institution of liberal arts, sciences, and professional studies are evident by the achievements recorded within these pages. The rich variety of these scholarly efforts leads to a more vibrant campus, a more inspired faculty, and a more engaged student body.

On behalf of the Office of Research and Sponsored Programs and the entire Division of Academic Affairs, we congratulate all those who have played a role in this year’s scholarly efforts. We are both grateful and proud of the academic, artistic, and cultural contributions provided by the Stockton family.

The arts and humanities are flourishing at Stockton and nowhere is this fact more obvious than in the scholarly and creative productivity of the ARHU faculty. The following pages provide a record of faculty achievement: in the numerous successful applications for internal and external grants, and in the performances, exhibitions, and scholarly presentations and publications that those awards help make possible. The variety of projects represented here is impressive: we see faculty engaged in archaeological research in Israel and archival research Paris, in books on art during the New Deal and foreign language learners in China. We see performances of dance in Lebanon, of jazz and classical music at the Jersey shore, and of a Eudora Welty short story in Georgia.

As the above examples make clear, our humanities scholars have participated in professional conferences all over the world, presenting their scholarly work while also playing integral roles in the professional organizations central to their disciplines. They are well-published, contributing reviews and articles to scholarly journals and essays and chapters to book collections, often while pursuing their own book projects. Our artists have produced works that have been performed and exhibited locally, nationally and internationally, while also contributing their expertise in juried competitions and in presentations on other artists’ work as well as their own. ARHU is very proud of its faculty’s ongoing productivity, which both complements and bolsters its strong reputation for teaching excellence.

This record also shows the ways in which ARHU bridges divisions between the arts and humanities and among the disciplines. Some Communication Studies faculty, for instance, produce scholarly work, while others produce creative video and documentaries. In Literature, too, faculty publish scholarly articles, introductions, and books, or imaginative work—poetry, fiction, and creative nonfiction. Our musicians both perform and lecture on renowned musicians and musical history. Collaborations between faculty in artistic or scholarly disciplines are frequent in ARHU, yielding performance pieces, publications, and exhibits that have their roots in history, in literature, or in philosophical inquiry.

The quantity and the quality of ARHU faculty output, its breadth and its depth, are second to none, and show no sign of diminishing. In this regard, it is now and will ever be an exciting time to be working in the School of Arts and Humanities.

I am pleased to present the many activities of the School of Business faculty in AY14-15 as detailed below. It was plainly a productive year for the School, with a broad cross section of our faculty members reporting activities this academic year.

The mission statement for the School of Business says about research that “The faculty actively pursues scholarly activities and professional development that contribute to classroom effectiveness” and that “The faculty produces scholarly works that advance the knowledge and practice of business, hospitality and tourism management, and computer science and information systems.” Congruent with this mission, it is important to note that these works span the whole range of scholarly activities, including disciplinary based works, learning and pedagogical research, and strong contributions to practice. Themes of note this year include economic development from helping NJ communities recover from Hurricane Sandy to supporting the hospitality industry in Hawaii, Thailand, Vietnam, and Bali, and pedagogical expertise including class exercises, case books, legal issues in education and models for advising.

This listing of scholarly works again highlights that the business faculty is a group that is diverse along multiple dimensions, striving hard to make a positive impact in the lives of our students, our disciplines, and our communities.

From presentations to publications, awards and service, The School of Education faculty and staff scholarly activities demonstrate creativity, instructional and assessment leadership, responses to reform, and international as well as interdisciplinary collaborations. Education faculty members gave engaging presentations of their work at regional, national and international conferences; published articles in scholarly and professional venues, including journals and books; and completed sponsored grant projects on the local, regional and statewide level. On behalf of the School of Education, I'm delighted to share the following summaries of these achievements with you. As our faculty continue to thrive in their scholarly and creative work, I look forward to presenting similar reports of future contributions already underway for the year ahead.

Scholarly and creative output in the School of General Studies covers a significant breadth of endeavors largely due to the fact that we have a very diverse group of faculty working in many different fields. Generally speaking, this work can be divided up into four groups: Many faculty members undertake pedagogical studies, which is not surprising given that many of them have the responsibility to teach freshmen writing and quantitative reasoning skills, and their research grows out of and complements their teaching (Frank Cerreto, Peter Cho, Francis Nzuki, and Daniel Tomé); several faculty work in the field of Holocaust & Genocide Studies, both in terms of scholarship and analysis, as well as in the collection and editing of our widely acclaimed Holocaust survivor memoirs (Elisa Von Joeden-Forgey, Maryann McLoughlin, and Carol Rittner); a third group works work in scholarship pertaining to other fields such as literature, American Studies, Jewish Studies, communication studies, along with cultural and environmental studies (Marcia Fiedler, Geoffrey Gust, John O’Hara, and Richard Trama); and a final grouping, centered in our Writing Minor, publishes and performs poetry, drama, fiction, and creative non-fiction (Emari DiGiorgio and Ben Heins).

Emphasis on the complementarity of scholarship, creative endeavor, and teaching is growing, so this and the arrival of some new faculty members, bringing new creative and scholarly talents, suggests that there will be a flourishing in the School of General Studies in the coming years. We look forward to the School building on this year’s impressive achievements.

We are pleased to present the achievements of the faculty of the School of Health Sciences. Over the past year our faculty have worked hard to make significant impact in their respective fields. The activities described in the following pages represent the breadth and depth of the health science disciplines in the School, and reflect the commitment of our faculty and students to improving the health and quality of life for all people. Through publications, presentations, and internal and external grant activity, faculty work to change agents to advance their disciplines and directly impact the health of our communities. As you review the following pages, you will note that many of these projects involve partnerships, at the local, state, national and global level. Our faculty have received grants from local foundations, worked with community agencies to secure federal grant funds, and partnered with state-wide groups to improve the health of individuals with intellectual and developmental disabilities. This year, we continued our global efforts with an interdisciplinary learning abroad trip to Colombia, South America where we partner with a university with health science programs. This initiative, which is part of our efforts to build interprofessional education and practice into all of our curricula, provided students with a rich opportunity to learn and work in a very different health care system. In all of these activities, student involvement is a cornerstone. We are committed to providing our students with rich clinical and research experiences that will prepare them for their future roles as health care providers and scientists.

Faculty also provide service to their professions and to the neighborhoods in which they live and work by serving on editorial boards, foundations, professional organizations, and community service agencies. Every day our faculty live the principles that form the mission of our School, which include dedication to excellence in learning and teaching, service to the community, research and clinical scholarship, with as much student involvement as possible. We value and cultivate supportive relationships with our community partners, and infuse and instill an attitude of lifelong learning for excellence in health care and for improved quality of life for those we serve.

The School of Natural Sciences and Mathematics at Stockton University trains undergraduate and graduate students in the classroom, the laboratory and in the field. An important part of this training is exposure to and participation with active professionals engaged in their fields of scholarship. The hallmark of research and scholarly activity in the School of Natural Sciences and Mathematics at Stockton University is interdisciplinary and collaborative work. Physical scientists, life scientists, mathematicians and social scientists working together to tackle real world problems and to offer solutions to their stakeholders and sponsors. Within the context of a primarily undergraduate institution, the depth and breadth of scholarly activities within the School is quite impressive. Particularly as most has been done in collaboration with undergraduate students. Our researchers have published in some of the science world’s best journals including “Science,” the “American Journal of Physics,” the “Physical Review,” “Papers in Paleontology,” the “Journal of Organic Chemistry” and the “Canadian Journal of Forestry” among others. Research sponsors have included the New Jersey Department of Environmental Protection, the US Department of the Interior, the US Environmental Protection Agency, the National Atmospheric and Oceanic Administration, among others and generous competitive internal support from the University. Numerous presentations at scientific conferences, invited lectures and public forums, including undergraduate science symposiums has provided regional and national exposure and greatly served to enhance the reputation of the School of Natural Sciences and Mathematics and Stockton University overall. This success does not exist in a vacuum. The support of a dedicated faculty and staff, new laboratories and facilities in the Unified Science Center and at the Marine Field Station make this possible. As we close the book on another successful academic year, we look forward to continuing progress in the new. Construction on the second phase of the Unified Science Center (USC²) will begin in the fall 2015 and we look forward to the delivery of our new research vessel, the RV Petrel. Both will have far reaching effects on our ability to deliver on our goals of excellence in education and scholarship.

I’m happy to introduce the recent faculty activities in The School of Social and Behavioral Sciences. Their efforts in scholarship and engagement demonstrate a commitment to both individual development and social wellbeing. They seek to understand the impact of physical and mental health, cognitive performance, spirituality, political behavior, cultural norms, and societal problems. Their work in disaster preparedness, employment and economy, and global awareness are examples of important and timely topics.

Please join me in congratulating the Social and Behavioral Sciences faculty for their accomplishments and contributions.
