GRANTS OFFICE
THE RICHARD STOCKTON COLLEGE OF NEW JERSEY

SCHOLARLY ACTIVITY
SEPTEMBER 2012 THROUGH AUGUST 2013

www.stockton.edu
Stockton is committed to research and academic pursuits which contribute to the intellectual and social growth of our community. On behalf of the Grants Office and the entire Division of Academic Affairs, we are pleased to present this year’s Scholarly Activity Booklet.

This booklet showcases the innovative, collaborative, and highly diverse work of Stockton’s faculty, staff, and students. It is illustrative of the deep and meaningful connections that exist among those who teach, learn, and work on campus and who benefit from, and contribute to, the uniqueness of our institution. These efforts directly support the College’s strategic themes of Learning, Engagement, Global Perspectives, and Sustainability.

Inside you will find a wealth of details regarding the numerous publications, awards, grants, and performances that, over the course of one year, have been developed, assembled, and presented by dedicated members of our community – individuals who represent Stockton with their irreplaceable talents and indefatigable passion.

The Office of the Provost commends and celebrates the exceptional faculty, staff, and students whose commitment is evidenced within the pages of this rich and substantive compendium and endorses the time and talent that they have invested in scholarly pursuits over the past year.

• Scholarly Activity Statistical Overview ................................................ 47
Once again, the faculty of the School of Arts and Humanities has been very productive, both in scholarly and creative activities. ARHU’s scholars have published a plethora of articles and book chapters, while its artists have presented a great many documentaries, exhibits, and performances. The school is very proud of its on-going record, which complements and helps to bolster its strong reputation for teaching excellence.

Within ARHU there is the fundamental division between those faculty in the arts who engage in creating works of art of different kinds, and those in the humanities who engage, by and large, in more traditional scholarly work, producing articles and books for publication. There are also disciplinary differences within these two areas. In the humanities, faculty members follow different practices in accordance with the norms of their discipline. In Historical Studies, for example, faculty members are expected to write a book-length monograph, while articles are very much of secondary importance; in Languages and Culture Studies, Literature, and Philosophy, articles are more frequently the norm. On the arts side, faculty in the Visual Arts most frequently develop work for exhibits, while publications are merely addenda to such work; in the Performing Arts, productivity is tied, for example, to the choreographed dance, the choral or jazz concert, or the directed or stage-managed play.

ARHU faculty members also endeavor to bridge divisions between the arts and humanities and among the disciplines. Communication Studies, for example, includes in its ranks both those who study questions relating to the humanities and those who create works of art, usually documentaries and other video work. Likewise, Literature is made up of scholars who study literary work and culture and creative writers who write fiction and poetry. Further, the interdisciplinary character and makeup of the faculty in the school leads many artists to work with humanists to produce plays based upon historical research, for example, and humanists who endeavor (sometimes inspired by the G-courses they teach) to incorporate artistic themes and practices into their scholarship.

A look at the pages that follow reaffirms the fact that ARHU faculty produce a great deal. Further, the quantity and the quality of this output, its breadth and its depth, compares favorably with that of any public liberal arts college in the United States. In this regard, in particular, it is always an exciting time to be working within the School of Arts and Humanities.

I am pleased to present the many activities of the School of Business faculty in AY12-13 as detailed below. It was plainly a productive year for the School, with a broad cross section of our faculty members reporting activities in AY12-13.

Statement for the School of Business says about research that “The faculty actively pursues scholarly activities and professional development that contribute to classroom effectiveness” and that “The faculty produces scholarly works that advance the knowledge and practice of business, hospitality and tourism management, and computer science and information systems.” Congruent with this mission, it is important to note that these works span the whole range of scholarly activities, including disciplinary based works, learning and pedagogical research, and strong contributions to practice. Themes of note this year include research supporting the Business Studies Program newest concentration of Financial Planning, works exploring economic development theory and practice in Atlantic City to the developing world, and contributions to both research on and the practice of the assessment of student learning and accreditation.

This listing of scholarly works again highlights that the business faculty is a group that is diverse along multiple dimension, striving hard to make a positive impact in the lives of our students, our disciplines, and our communities.

Faculty members from the School of Education continue to demonstrate their collaborative, technological, international and pedagogical expertise in the wide variety of scholarly achievements that appear in this section of the report. Many Education faculty members gave presentations of their work at regional, national and international conferences; several have published articles in scholarly and professional publications; several more have earned sponsored project awards to develop or continue their research; and some have completed a book project this past year. On behalf of the School of Education, I’m delighted to share the following summaries of these achievements with you, and I look forward to presenting similar reports of future contributions already underway for the year ahead.

The rich tapestry of the scholarly and creative activities of the faculty in the School of General Studies attests to the difference between teachers and teacher-scholars. The former largely pass on knowledge or skills while, in the latter case, the process is more indirect. Teacher-scholars are actively involved in producing new knowledge and creative work and role model these activities to students.

In doing so, faculty show their students that higher education is not a place to cut, past and regurgitate but a place where new knowledge is produced and where new creative works underpin meaningful impulses toward an ever changing culture.

What makes this tapestry extraordinary is that, as teachers, the faculty in the School of General Studies deals with students most at risk, i.e., freshmen and those less prepared for College. Concentrating on teaching alone would be quite understandable.

However, the faculty’s scholarly and creative productivity bridges the ostensible gap: the faculty understands that scholarship and creative productivity makes for better teaching.

Finally, the large number of presentations underscores that this faculty understands its service functions as well.

Congratulations for a fine job.

Faculty members in the School of Health Sciences are committed to teaching, scholarship, and service. In their role as scholars, faculty strive to make meaningful contributions to the advancement of their fields. Faculty members regularly conduct research and share their findings through publications and presentations to state, national, and international professional communities. In addition, student-faculty research is valued and faculty members often mentor Stockton students through the research process.

The work described on the following pages represents breadth and depth of contributions to health sciences. This year marks the awarding of the first Fulbright Scholar for a member of our faculty for work in HIV-AIDS. There is published research related to topics such as: treatment for adolescents with Autism Spectrum Disorders, childhood obesity with local solutions, effect of cold therapy on muscle function, health behavior attitudes of gay male couples, assessment of hospitalized patients with psychiatric disorders, history of military health care, and an innovative treatment for wound care. Professional presentations abounded such as methods of conducting research presented in San Diego, tools to assess the function of persons living with HIV presented in South Africa, and a study of rehabilitation settings after total knee replacement presented in Dubai.

Teaching and scholarship are highly valued in our School which often translates into research on the science of teaching. Faculty and students presented findings related to such areas as use of E-portfolios, reflective journaling, and fieldwork experience. Devoted to serving the community, faculty members also gave of their time and expertise. This year, examples of service were reported on the Board of Trustees of a regional health care system, on the Juvenile Diabetes Research Foundation, and as President-Elect of the New Jersey Speech-Language Hearing Association.

This scholarly report highlights the remarkable contributions the faculty members of the School of Health Sciences are making to enhance our communities.

Faculty and staff of the School of Natural Sciences and Mathematics research and scholarly endeavors as contained in the current issue of Stockton’s Scholarly Activity Book continues to be recognized regionally, nationally, and internationally. A hallmark of most of the scholarly activity involves undergraduate and graduate students working in close collaboration with their faculty mentors on cutting edge real world research. This is the unique characteristic of a Stockton degree in Science or Mathematics has been the enrichment students acquire through these efforts. Faculty quite frequently present their work at professional meetings with their students listed as co-authors.

It is important to note that faculty research and scholarly endeavors continue to range from local to global in scope. Faculty and their students are studying the impacts of pine bark beetle infestation in the Pinelands Preserve, to sea grasses in Barnegat Bay, to nearby off-shore artificial reef habitats as well as “ghost” crab traps located and retrieved through the use of hi-tech Side Scan Sonar and ROV technology, to micro-weather studies, to acoustic studies of importance to the U.S. Navy, to the effects of wind gusts and shear turbulence on commercial aircraft, to studies related to dinosaur and mammal locomotion. This work has been supported by a combination of College funds such as R&PD, the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Agency (NOAA), the Federal Aeronautics Administration (FAA), the Army Corps of Engineers, and the State of New Jersey.

On behalf of the faculty, staff, and students of the School of Natural Sciences and Mathematics, I would like to thank the College for continued support of our facilities both on campus and at the Nacote Creek Field Station and in particular a special note of gratitude for the funding of the construction and outfitting of the Unified Science Center which will greatly enhance NAMS’ faculty/student research productivity.

SCHOOL OF SOCIAL AND BEHAVIORAL SCIENCES

I’m proud to introduce the recent faculty activities in The School of Social and Behavioral Sciences. Their efforts in scholarship and engagement demonstrate a commitment to both individual development and social wellbeing. They seek to understand the impact of physical and mental health, cognitive performance, spirituality, political behavior, cultural norms, and societal problems. In addition, as experts in pedagogy, they are leaders in critical thinking and program assessment.

Please join me in congratulating the Social and Behavioral Sciences faculty for their accomplishments and contributions.
