Galloway Township, NJ- In response to regional needs in the area of infrastructure protection and emergency management, The Richard Stockton College of New Jersey has announced the development of a new certificate program in Homeland Security and Domestic Preparedness. The 130-hour program is a blended format that utilizes online- and classroom-based instruction. The certificate program consists of 34 hours of classroom instruction and 96 hours of online instruction. “The blended format is well-suited for working professionals,” explained Cynthia Sosnowski, Executive Director of Continuing Studies for Health and Human Services. Participants will engage in classroom-based learning once every eight weeks and further their study through interactive online instruction between classroom sessions.

According to Lieutenant Colonel Mark Anarumo, Chair of Homeland Security and Terrorism Studies at Stockton College, Homeland Security continues to be a national priority. “This program will give members of the law enforcement, emergency services, corporate and public health communities the tools they need to prepare and respond to domestic and foreign threats against our homeland and to respond in emergency situations, whether natural or manmade.” “The program is unique because it is designed to meet the challenges of both public and private sector personnel.” In addition to a core course in Homeland Security, the program includes courses in Terrorism, Infrastructure Protection, Sectorized Security, and Psychology of Homeland Security.

“Stockton College is fortunate to be able to offer nationally recognized faculty locally,” Sosnowski stated. The Richard Stockton College of New Jersey is located one hour from Philadelphia and two hours from New York City. “Our proximity to Philadelphia and New York allows for greater access to this dynamic program,” she concluded.
