Galloway Township, NJ- The Richard Stockton College of New Jersey School of Graduate and Continuing Studies in collaboration with the Building Contractors Association of New Jersey is offering a Construction Project Management Certificate. This certificate is designed for individuals who have a fundamental knowledge of construction projects but would like to broaden their skills. The program will produce qualified individuals to carry out the current administration's plans to spend billions rebuilding America's infrastructure and will prepare them for the 21st century construction site.

Five courses are needed for certification. Each course will address a critical facet of managing a construction project from its inception to completion. The foundation course for the sequence of classes is "Principles of Construction Project Management" which will begin April 21, 2009 and will continue for four weeks on Tuesdays and Thursday from 6:30 p.m. to 9:00 p.m. on the Galloway Township campus of Stockton College.

Many of these courses will offer insight into sustainable building construction trends. According to Israel Posner, PhD, Executive Director of Management Development and Professional Services at Stockton College, "These classes will be at the cutting edge of the environmental movement that is sweeping the nation and will complement Stockton's long-standing tradition of being environmentally friendly." During the fall of 2009, the class "Sustainable Building – Green Initiatives" will be taught by Donald Moore, Associate Vice President of Operations at Stockton College. Moore is responsible for developing and implementing eco-friendly construction projects at Stockton, which is known as "New Jersey's Green College."

Through this certificate and other programs being offered, The Richard Stockton College of New Jersey seeks to be the resource for business, the public sector, industry and individuals seeking awareness and knowledge about current environmental initiatives that will be standard in the future.
